English Ignorance of American Matters.

Editors Dispatch: The Quarterly Review (English) recently published an article on The Life and Times of James Madison," partly in review of Mr. Rives's book. What do you think of the author making the statement that Mr. Madison was never

Mrs. Madison was certainly one of the most famous of American women, and during her long residence in Washington associated constantly with distinguished people of many countries. Yet, here is a writer, in a leading British review, who never heard of her, and who, while he presumes to en-lighten others about Mr. Madison, evidently with the strict injunction not to stir never read his biography.

And here is something stranger still. Little's Living Age (No. 1778) republishes the sald article, giving it the leading place, and of those impenetrable mists which frequentmakes no note or comment on the remarkable statement. Perhaps the editor of the Living Age did not read the article before ordering its publication; perhaps he did instantly hastened back to find his child, not know it was a blunder. G.

JULY 17, 1878. To the Editors of the Dispatch:

Sirs,—Having perused an interesting extract from the New York Sun of the 14th instant, in your issue of the 16th, about Dr. Carver, the wonderful rifleman, I enclose the following from the New York Sportsman of the 13th. Respectfully, A. N. Pizzini, Richmond (Va.) correspondent.

Bism rek's Anxiety for Peace.

The Berlin correspondent of the London er date of July 3d, gives Times, writing unt the following as the language of Prince Bismarck in reply to a remark that Europe was convinced that he earnestly desired peace:

"I wished for peace, and contributed as much as possible to it as soon as I could clearly see my way-that is to say, from the time of Count Schouvaloff's first visit to me at Fürstenburg. I sincerely respected this man for having left London courageously to tell his master the truth, and who on arriving at St. Petersburg incurred the risk of disgrace and exile if not successful in fulfilling his patriotic and humanitarian mission. Despite my feeble health, despite the imperious commands of my physicians, I did not hesitate to undergo the fatigue imposed on me as president of the congress; but if duty calls me to bear these fatigues in the interest of peace it does not go to the length of bidding me do so if peace is not likely to result from our deliberations. England has here achieved a magnificent success. She has made Bulgaria end at the foot of the Balkans; she has restored to Turkey the Ægean Sea; she has covered Constantinople by the Balkans, and the question of the Straits will be settled to her satisfaction. But it must be remembered that Russia was victorious, and that serious account must be taken of the concessions she has already made. I do not wish to recall my comparison of the whale and the elephant. England has doubtless proved by the preparations she has already made that she might become a military power, that she might sustain a war lasting several years. But herein consists our sole interest, which is that of peace, and which guides our efforts. A war between two great Powers like England and Russia would grievously affect the whole of Europe, paralyze all interests, and menace every one. The danger is that, despite all efforts, the conflict would become general, for no one knows the incidents which might arise during a prolonged struggle, tion settled I was certain we should have peace. On this question I saw the English would go to war; and when, on Friday England and Russia broke down I bastened efforts of their representatives. The English ought not to forget that they have attained a great success without war and without spending the blood and money which a great war would have cost them. Count Schouvaloff certainly does his best, and I ## cannot but admire him in the congress."

Dog Supplying Food to a Lost Child. One of the most striking instances which we have heard, say the Messrs. Chambers in their "Anecdotes of Dogs," of sagacity and personal attachment in the shepherd's dog, occurred about a half-century ago among the Grampian mountains. In one of his excursions to his distant flocks a shepherd took with him one of his children. After traversing the hills for some time, attended by his dog, the shepherd found himself under the necessity of ascending a summit some distance to have a more extensive view of his range. As the ascent was too fatiguing for the child he left him on a small plain at the bottom, from it till his return. Scarcely, however, had he gained the summit when the horizon was suddenly darkened by one ly descend so rapidly amid these mountains as, in the space of a few minutes, almost to turn day into night. The anxious father but, owing to the unusual darkness and his own trepidation, he unfortunately missed his way in the descent. After a fruitless search of many hours among the dangerous morasses and cataracts with which these mountains abound he was at last overtaken by night. Still wandering on without knowing whither, he at length came to the verge of mist, and by the light of the moon discovered that he had reached the bottom of the valley, and was within a short distance of his cottage. To renew the search that night was equally fruitless and dangerous. He was therefore obliged to return to his cottage, having lost both his child and anecdote by a western trapper, who, of his dog, which had attended him faithcourse, boasted that the feat was performed fully for years. Next morning by dayby himself. In his dilemma, a short, thick-set man offered him a seat in his carriage, which was eagerly accepted. The occupant of the carriage was polite, and pointed out the beauties of the region. He seemed to have the faculty of drawing men out rather than of communicating. "General McClellan lives in this neighborhood, I believe," said the visitor. "He does. He has a small home on the mountain." The drive was extended. The courteous gentleman seemed to have many acquaintances. Nearly every passer, on foot or in carriage, lifted his hat. Public men were talked of. The stranger was about to ask about the "General," and he now wonders that he did not. The coach pulled up at an elegant mansion, and the gentleman said: "This is General McClellan's house; won't you walk in?" "And this is Governor McClellan, I presume," said the stranger. MR. HIGGINSON'S BABY-CARBIAGE AND THE CITY-A CURIOUS CASE.

The New York Times says: Mr. Joseph Pool, president of the Manufacturers and Merchants Bank, of this city, is now conducting a suit against Mr. Stephen Higginson, a well-to-do coffee merchant, for damages, and to compel the discontinuance of an alleged nuisance. The gentlemen are neighbors, as they live in the same apartment-house, No. 68 Madison avenue. Mr. Higginson's family occupies the fifth floor, white Mr. Pool's occupies the bistory." fourth. Mr. Pool alleges that Mr. Higginson, Mrs. Higginson, and their French servant, Mile. Pernot, in combination with an infantile Higginson, ætat, tifteen months, and and her guests. He declares that the babycarriage has been rolled, dragged, or propelled above his apartments at every hour of the day and night for months past, and that he has thus been prevented from procuring the sleep necessary to enable him to efficiently discharge the duties of his post. One day last week Mr. Pool's counsel, using his affidavit and the corroborative affidavits of Mrs. Pool and a domestic named Mary Ann Sheehy, obtained from Judge Larremore a temporary injunction against the rolling of the vehicle through the Higginonian apartments.

Yesterday was fixed upon as the time for Mr. Higginson to show cause why the injunction should not be made permanent. Accordingly, Mr. Roger A. Pryor appeared before Judge Van Hoesen, in the Court of Common Pleas, and submitted affidavits meant to controvert the Pool side of the case. The affidavits were made by Mr. and Mrs. Higginson and Mlle. Pernot, and are corroborative of others. It was admitted that there is in the Higginsonian apartment was described as 2 feet long, 14 inches hair in the middle.-Picayune. wide, and 2 inches high from the floor, made of fine wood, and resting upon lignumsaid to weigh only nine pounds. The affiants declared that the vehicle made no noise | Blade. in rolling over the floor, and all agreed that Mr. and Mrs. Pool are fretful and peevish to the last degree. Mr. Higginson swore that though there never was any real cause for complaint on the part of Mr. Pool, yet when that gentleman did complain he bad the carpets in his rooms taken up and padding placed underneath to deaden any sound made by the carriage, and also had husband, and to illustrate the ex- Times. treme peevishness of Mr. and Mrs. Pool, declared that several times when she had just got out of bed, and, of course, wore no shoes, as she walked across her bedroom, Mrs. Pool had knocked on the ceiling with a stick to indicate that she was making too much noise. He contended that a man had a right to use his property in an accustomed manner, and that trifling inconveniences resulting to other persons from such use could not be regarded as reasons for pronouncing either the propertv or the use a nuisance. In order to constitute a nuisance one must use his property in an unreasonable, unwarrantable, or unlawful manner. "Nuisances," said he, "arising out of the use to which property is devoted, either by the owner or the party in lawful possession, are declared so by the courts with extreme caution. It is proper and highly important that courts should proceed with extreme caution, and weigh the relative rights of the parties with extreme care. People living in cities and large towns must submit to some inconveniences, some nuisances, some discomforts, some miseries, and some damage. There is not a city where there are not thousands of stitute a nuisance one must use his pronot a city where there are not thousands of things unsettled that the law, following out the ordinary rule, would feel compelled to abate. The law cannot declare a thing a nuisance because it is unpleasant to the eye or ear, nor because its existence is a constant source of irritation and annoyance to others. No offensive noises are recognized. It does not pander to men's tastes, nor consult their mere convenience. It simply secures and upholds their material rights, and shields them from unwarranted invasion. Should the court yield to the preposterous demand, in what terms should the injunction be framed? Will it restrain defendant from any and all use of the baby-carriage, or will it regulate the velocity of the vehicle, or merely prescribe that its wheels be muffled? Perhaps the the eye or ear, nor because its existence is that its wheels be muffled? Perhaps the remedy may be still more radical, for remedies adjust themselves to the exigencies of the case, and the defendant may be required by the court to administer some other opiate for the insomnia of the infant. The court cannot be content to a content the remedies and the planters X and the small BRICK STORE adjoining the St. James Hotel. The court cannot be content simply to stop the carriage, for then the unappeased clamors of the child will prove to be a still more intolerable nuisance. The example of King Herod and the speculations of Dean Swift suggest a yet more effectual relief for plaintiff's grievances. But the authority of these cynics will hardly avail in a court of equity of which infants are supposed to be the special favorites."
